In July, 1907, the Indian Office adopted the system of giving a serial number to every circular sent out giving instruction or information as to the work in the field.

The numbering began with 160, because for 10 years some of the divisions of the office had been giving division numbers to circulars issued by them, respectively, and the highest division number reached had been 159. Prior to 1897 Indian Office circulars had been issued without numbers. It is believed that none of those issued previous to July, 1907, would now have any material bearing on the administrative work of the office.
